

The Irish Times is Ireland's leading independent, trusted source of news and information, publishing on multiple platforms across digital, print, audio and video content, and would like to recruit entry grade digital journalists.

Entry-grade opportunities for digital journalists

The Irish Times currently has entry-grade opportunities for journalists to work across digital and print production. If you are in the early stages of your career, interested in news and looking for an opportunity to work as part of a multimedia newsroom, we would like to hear from you.

The successful candidates will gain valuable experience in producing all forms of content for digital and print platforms at an exciting time of change for The Irish Times.

We are seeking applications from those who are committed to meeting the standards of care and accuracy, combined with scrupulous fairness, which are essential hallmarks of journalism in The Irish Times.

Key elements of the role include copy-editing skills, the ability to write engaging headlines and standfirsts, and producing clean, accurate copy to deadline. An understanding of media and libel laws and knowledge of SEO and social media are central to the role.

The salary and other terms and conditions for both positions will be based on the Agreement between the Company and the National Union of Journalists.

If you are interested in applying for this position please send your CV and a cover letter to careers@irishtimes.com or to:
